FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

William Byun Joins Cleantech Law Partners as Director of Asia Practice Group

San Francisco, (February 22, 2016) Cleantech Law Partners (www.cleantechlaw.com) announces today that William Byun has joined the firm as the Director of the firm's Asia practice group.

Cleantech Law Partners, a full-service law firm dedicated exclusively to the legal and policy needs of the renewable energy industry, is proud to add yet another top lawyer to our team and expand our firm deeper into the Asia markets.

William is a specialist in renewable energy and climate change project development and investment. He has worked for the past 25 years in Asia (Tokyo, Seoul, Jakarta, Singapore, Bangkok) in infrastructure investment and renewable energy and is recognized by enterprises, governments and media as an expert in the field.

Previously, he had been the head of a US$ 100 million PE fund for Asia infrastructure, had acted as the Managing Director for the Renewables and Climate Change for Asia and the Middle East for AES, a US Fortune 500 company (NYSE:AES), and had founded one of Asia's pioneer CER firms.

William's practice allows him to work closely with Asian state-linked investment funds whose interests are moving towards cleantech investment opportunities in the US. Throughout his career, he has been active in traditional law firm settings and also in an entrepreneurial capacity with respect to direct project development.

Currently, William also is an adjunct faculty member for global business strategy at California State University, San Marcos and is a judge on the awards committee for the Global Energy Prize awarding over US$ 1 million annually for leading scientific research in energy.

William was also the first U.S. Fulbright Scholar in residence at the Ministry of Finance in Korea, and has degrees from the University of Chicago, University of Michigan, and University of London (SOAS and LSE), in Economics, Law and Sociology.
